Hwan resigned Friday as president of the ruling Democratic Justice Party, saying that he should remain above party politics in the period before a new presidential election.

The move was another concession to the opposition, which had demanded that Mr. Chun leave the party post. But it fell far short of the additional opposition demand that he appoint a caretaker cabinet drawn from all sectors of society to guarantee the government's neutrality in the election.

Mr. Chun agreed 10 days ago to permit direct presidential elections po choose his successor, but he is widely unpopular and his good faith seems to be broadly doubted.

"This is a crucial time to prepare for the first peaceful transfer of power in the 40-year political history of the republic," Mr. Chun said in announcing his resignation from the party post. Casey Envisaged Secret Spy Unit With Iran Profit, North Testifies

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON - Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North testified Friday that William J. Casey envisioned using profits from the covert sale of arms to Iran to set up an intelligence agency outside the government that would work secretly for U.S. foreign policy goals. "The director was interested in going to an off-the-shelf, self-sustaining entity that could perform functions for the United States," the colonel said.

He said he saw nothing illegal or unconstitutional about the plan by Mr. Casey, the head of the Central Intelligence Agency, who died of cancer in May.

However, in his fourth day of testimony before the joint congressional Iran-contra committee, Colonel North denied that using the fund meant "a CIA outside of the CIA" was being created, as a com-

L.A. Slumlord Sentenced to Live Like His Tenants

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - A Beverly Hills neurosurgeon has been sentenced to wear an electronic device to make sure he obeys his courtordered, 30-day confinement in a vermin-infested apartm ing that he failed to repair.

Dr. Milton Avol will have to wear a so-called electronic leash on his ankle so authorities will know if he leaves his building, which he rents to low-income tenants.

"I will only permit you to go outside the building so you can assist in repairs to the building," Judge Veronica Simmons-McBeth of the Municipal Court said this past week as she ordered the confinement to start Monday.

She imposed the sentence, the first of its kind in Los Angeles, two years ago, after Dr. Avol repeatedly failed to improve conditions at four buildings he owned. It had been suspended during appeals. "I'm glad he's finally serving his time in this building," said Deputy City Attorney Stephanie Sautner. "It's still a slum building. It's infested with vermin and cockroaches, electrical problems, mildewed walls, faulty wiring."

By E.J. Dionne Jr. New York Times Service WASHINGTON - It was not susprising that Kitty Dukakis, the wife of Michael S. Dukakis, the governor of Massachuseus and a mocratic presidential contender, decided to discuss her former idiction to diet pills in public. And that, according to politicians, ics, may be the most remarkable fact about the way the 1988 presidential campaign is developing. Ever since Gary Hart's withdrawal from the contest in May because of publicity over his relationship with a 29-year-old model, what might be called confessional politics — the need for public figures to disclose, voluntarily, before the press does, facts that might be even remotely embarrassing - has

Western Australia's Rural Voters Strain for a Voice

By Michael Richardson ternational Herald Tribuse

KALGOORLIE, Western Australia — On a rare visit to his hometown during the campaign for Australia's national elections, scheduled for Saturday, Graeme Campbell sat in his office on the main street here and gazed at a map of Western Australia that covered most of one wall.

"It's a pretty big electorate," he said wryly, referring to the voting

"It includes 92 percent of Western Australia, virtually the whole state except for Perth and a bit of wasteland around it."

Perth is the state capital, and most of the population of Western Australia is clustered there and in surrounding districts. And so Mr. Campbell, a man of the outback, was cracking a joke at the expense of city dwellers.

He is a member of Australia's ruling Labor Party and represents the seat of Kalgoorlie in the House of Representatives, the lower chamber of Australia's Federal Parliament in Canberra.

The electorate takes its name from Kalgoorlie, a gold-mining center 310 miles (550 kilometers) east of Perth. It covers about a million square miles (2.5 million square kilometers), roughly the size of the European Community. According to federal election au-

 But mostly there are no people, just endless expanses of semiarid land spotted with gum trees and spinifex, a sharp grass. Temperatures rise to more than 40 degrees centigrade (104 degrees Fahrenheit) for much of the year.

A lot of political campaigning has to be done in light aircraft and four-wheel-drive vehicles.

Mr. Campbell, 48, is well qualified to represent the electorate of Kalgoorlie. He has worked as a contract fencer, a driller, a blaster, an animal catcher, a wholesale distributor of soft drinks, a union official and a tender of livestock. His constituents, by and large an irreverent bunch, sometimes cal him "Fangs" or "Old Gummy" because he blew out his top teeth and fractured his jaw after laying a faulty dynamite charge.

Mr. Campbell has been the Labor minister of Parliament for Kalgoorlie since 1980. His winning margin in the last election, in 1984. was more than 6 percent.

He expects he will win again on Saturday, in part because the two main opposition parties, the Liber-als and the Nationals, are running rival candidates, mirroring a fight that earlier this year broke up a

But the situation in Kwale began to improve a few years ago with the aid of a global program promoting the use of a device dating to ancient Rome — the hand pump. Experts on the subject say that the pump provides one of the simplest and least expensive means of supplying safe water to populations in rural communities and those on the fringes of urban areas in the developing world.

Showboating on Subsidies

The chance of actually getting a binding international remembers World War II and Israel's continuous statements and international remembers World War II and Israel's continuous statements with their governments to guarantee them. agreement to do that, or anything remotely similar to it, is vanishingly small.

This kind of posturing is only likely to deflect the serious negotiations on farm subsidies that are getting under way. That is unfortunate, because all of the rich countries are spending far more than they want or need to spend on their farmers, and there is a useful deal to be struck.

Under the Reagan administration the subsidies have more than doubled, mainly because of the overgenerous farm bill in 1985. In Europe, farm subsidies are pushing the Community into a financial crisis. For the last several years America and the EC have been throwing more and more money into their frantic efforts to offset and outbid each other's subsidies as they struggle to dump their farm surpluses onto world markets. Together, the United States and the EC will spend $50 billion this year on farm subsidies.

But total abolition of subsidies is the wrong goal, and American attempts to press for it will only block progress toward the kind of money-saving bargain that is now possible. It is not only that, as everybody knows, farmers are voters who make

In a grand and sweeping gesture, the political trouble for governments that forare uneasy about their food supplies and want their governments to guarantee them. ernments will continue to support rice at whatever cost is necessary to ensure that at least a survival ration is grown at home. West Germany, currently blocking the attempt to rationalize the Community's crazy agriculture program, is a country in which people were literally starving 40 years ago. Things have got badly out of hand there, as they have in America, but not many countries will choose to leave their basic food supply to the vagaries of world markets.

But how about an agreement to cut out all the export subsidies? They represent true waste. Along with them, how about the indirect export subsidies that are responsible for the surpluses that cannot be sold except by dumping them abroad? Subsidizing farmers' incomes is a useful social policy, but the export subsidies are turning into an expensive scandal worldwide. As governments in America and elsewhere struggle to cope with the soaring costs, there is a chance at last to bring export subsidies under control. It should not be lost in a campaign to eliminate all farm supports, an idea that is neither realistic nor desirable. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

For Our Five Billionth, a Caring, Planning World?

CLAND, Switzerland — Earth's five billionth Current inhabitant is born today, July 11, the UN Fund for Population Activities guesses. The symbolic date was set in order to highlight a historic event and remind us that 5 billion is likely to become 10 billion before population stabilizes. In a world in which food, fuel, water and dignity are in access symply for hundreds of millions of

are in scarce supply for hundreds of millions of people, we must wonder if our species is out of control, in danger of plundering natural systems beyond their regenerative capacity. We wonder if today's birth is cause for celebration or dismay.

Adouna, a farming wife I met in Africa a few months ago, a few weeks after she gave birth to her 10th child, also wonders about today's children. The five billionth is more than likely to be born to a woman like her. She, too, hesitates between celebration and dismay. Surely she will love and care for her latest as best she can, as well as she cares for her others. But Adouna did not want another child. She is 34. Married at 15 to a man she did not choose, she has borne 10 children, one of whom died in infancy. Because she is responsible for providing the family with food, fuel and water, she is aware that there is less food, fuel and water than before The family's land has been divided up several times to accommodate brothers who married; she has to walk farther and farther to find firewood for cocking; and, she says, "there are so many more women who come to fetch well water now." Adouna, like rural women throughout the developing world, understands that resources are stretched, that there is less of everything for this generation — everything, except children.

"Children don't die as much as before," she says,

"so you don't need to have so many." Her logic is based on facts Governments' investments in health services resulted in a virtual health explosion. People live longer; infants have a better chance of survival. Fertility rates outstrip mortality rates. Of the 13 children that Adouna's mother bore, eight died before adulthood. A generation later, Adouna has lost only one of 10.

"There is never any rest; I'm tired all the time. We're poor and the fields are too small to provide for us. I want to give my children what they need—love and attention, schooling, a better life than ours, but if I have more children, life will be worse. I want to stop childbearing."

Her desire to plan her family meets two obstacles.

The first is the lack of nearby family planning services. She would have to travel many miles to obtain contraceptives. The second, an attitudinal barrier, would prevent her from using them.

Because her husband associates her fertility with his virility, he takes pride in each pregnancy as proof of his manhood. Like that of millions of other women, Adoma's security — from divorce and social disgrace, polygamy and physical violence — depends on pleasing her husband. If husbands want more children, wives will have them, even when it means more fatigue and malnourishment.

While Adouna remains trapped by society's customs, her country stroggies with a demographic expansion that consumes its financial and natural resources faster than development or nature provide. In dozens of countries the natural-resource base is overexploited to finance development and to feed growing numbers. Loss of forests, watersheds

Among donor mations, the United States was an early leader in support of family planning programs. Under the Reagan administration, however, family planning aid has fallen hostage to the ambitions of politicians who disregard the needs of Adouna in layor of the votes of so-called pro-family activists.

Pro-family in their vocabulary means opposed to family planning. Contraceptives are their enemy, not ill-health, powerty and despair. They would deny choice to Adouna, condeining her to bear more malnomished and illierate chikien. Continental Airlines jet. The near-collision occurred in rspace under the jurisdiction of the authorities in Gander, Newfoundland, and officials said a major question they will focus on in that inquiry is why the incident was not reported immediately to air traffic controllers, as required. In Thursday's near-collision, the Pan Am and Viasa planes were flying along a jet route that is outside of radar coverage. According to spokesmen for the FAA, the Pan Am crew requested permission from a controller to change altitude from 37,000 feet to 39,000 feet.

Radar coverage does not extend to large expanses of routes over the ocean, so controllers cannot follow the progress of planes on their scopes. Instead, they depend on the accuracy of crews and their equipment to keep the planes on track and at the correct altitude.

Safety margins are built into the routings by putting the tracks 60 miles apart and by providing that planes flying on the same track at altitudes over 29,000 feet be separated by either 2,000 feet in altitude or 10 minutes in flying time. A key issue was why the Delta plane had strayed 60 miles south of where it should have been. The chief hypothesis of officials close to the inquiry was that the Delta crew

Annesley, Christie's remarkable expert on Old Master drawings and No. 3 in the company's hierarchy, was conducting the sale and the strain showed. Historic British Beasts

LONDON - Two because heraldie beasts of the early 16th century, sold Thursday at Sotheby's for £302,500; may go down in London timated works of art relating to English history

Someby's expert describes the pair as a time and rare pair of tate. Tudor bronze heraldic beasts, first half of the 16th century." The entry mentioned, as an afterthought, the existence of "the bronze ser similar manufacture," by the Ital-ian sculptor Torrigiano, that sur-rounds the tomb of Henry VII and Elizabeth of York in Westminster Abbey. One of the beasts is a myth-ical animal with booved legs, a lion's snaring snout and goat-like horns, called a vale. If is seated on its hindlegs and has a collar in the shape of a coronet that points to some royal connection—could this be the illegitimate son of Heary VII, Henry Fitzcoy? A Brilliant schlar and former V & A keeper called Claude Blair, is beheved to have actually solved ther riddle The other beast is a greyhound (see photograph), again a probable in-dication of a royal connection.

The items are believed to have been consigned for sale by the soicitor of a collector in his eighties ving in Winchester. No broazes connected with repnaissance art in England, let aloue royal bronzes, have ever been and tioned, nor could expensaced dealers remember seeing any in the trade. They created a fury of extitement among dealers specializing in the period, and were eventually acquired by Daniel Katz of London, who probably has the sharpest eye for remaissance and barbone art and the shrewdest business sense, among all London desiers.

The estimate, Indicrously put at "£15,000-£20,000" (£16,500deterred nonspecialists from bidding as high as they might have otherwise. But one wonders what on earth the English Museums, ally so keen about the national heritage, were dome.

These are the most important objets d'art belonging to the na-tional heritage stricto sensu that have come up on the market in a long time. They are bound to stay in England, but the negligence, or waffling, will cost the nation a substantial amount of money.

U.S. Can No Longer Rely On an Eager Latin Market

SATURDAY-SUNDAY, JULY 11-12, 1987

By LOUIS UCHITELLE

New York Times Service

EW YORK - The United States is slowly increasing its exports, whitting away at the nation's huge trade deficit. If that deficit is to be dissolved, however, buyers must still be found for tens of billions of dollars of new sales abroad. In the past, whenever U.S. exports expanded, Latin America stepped forward to purchase a big share of the additional goods. This time the Latin buyers are gone.

Through decades of economic hardship, Latin America steadily purchased 15 percent of all the merchandise — the vast array of consumer products, machinery and equipment — that the United States sold abroad. Since the 1960s only Canada and Western Europe have purchased more than the Latin Americans. Even today Latin America keeps its third-place ranking although its purchases have finally begun to flag. They fell from a postwar high of 18.7 percent of America's exports in 1981 to 13 percent at an annual rate in this year's first Americans took 15 percent of U.S. exports. This figure has slipped.

For years, Latin

The debt crisis is the culprit, of course. The Latins can no longer borrow and spend in a big way. And the borrowing almost certainly will not resume in the next five to 10 years, which is when the United States must somehow find the buyers to bring down its $144 billion trade deficit.
"We cannot expect that our trade problems are going to be alleviated in Latin America, as they once were in the 1960s and '70s," said Henry Kanfman, chief economist at Salomon Brothers. Added Lawrence Veit, international economist at Brown Brothers Harriman & Co., "The era of financing American exports with lending has ended."

That helps explain why there is so much emphasis on getting Japan and West Germany, and also Taiwan, to consume more American goods. No one else has the extra buying power of these nations. Last year their current account surpluses, money earned from trade and other foreign transactions, totaled $137 billion.

DUT THERE are broader implications in the forced retreat of the Latins. Without the lending crutch, Latin America now has to pay for its imports with earnings from its own exports, particularly exports of manufactured products. These exports are already growing, chiefly from Brazil and Mexico.

In fact, the United States has been buying from Mexico and Brazil enough oil, machinery, auto parts, shoes and other consumer goods to develop a trade deficit with Latin America since 1983. That deficit is running at an annual rate of about $14 billion this year. The Latins are using the surplus money to pay some of the interest on their nearly $400 billion in foreign debt.

The new earning power might someday prompt Latin America to look elsewhere for imports. The fear is this: If the Latins are going to pay for foreign purchases with the profits of their own exports rather than with loans from American banks, why should they feel obligated to buy American goods in the future?

"The danger is still far down the road," said C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics in Washington. For now, the dollar's weakness has given U.S. products an advantage over goods priced in Japanese yea or West German Deutsche marks. This is reflected in recent Latin buying practices. Purchases of U.S. products have inched up since 1984.

Current solutions to keep Latins as buyers of U.S. goods involve a retain to the old borrow and spend formula. Various rescue plans call for increased lending by maintaineral lending agencies and commercial banks to major debtor nations, many of them in Latin America, as a way to ease debt payments. None of

"By the 1990s Latin America might solve its debt problem by becoming a manufacturing center," said David Hale, chief economist at Kemper Financial Services. In the meantime, the Latin for the Control of the Control o countries are unlikely to be of much help as a marketplace for Americans struggling to sell more products abroad.

United Sets Link In Europe

BA, 2 More Join Computer System

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK — United Airlines and three European carriers an-nounced Friday that they would build a $120 million reservation system to provide fuller information to travel agents in Europe and ultimately to improve flight service in Europe and in the United States.

The venture, to begin operation by next year, would serve 30,000 European travel agencies, which are beginning to link with sophisticated computer systems.

The new system's European partners are British Airways, KLM

Royal Dutch Airlines and Swissair. United does not fly to Europe, but its Apollo reservation system in the United States would provide the model for the system in Europe. Because the system will be linked to United's system in Denver, the travel agents using Apollo in the United States will also have more up-to-date information on Europe-an flights, fares, seat availability and so forth.

United Airlines' parent company, Allegis Corp., has said it will sell a stake in Apollo as part of the sale of a number of corporate as-sets. John Zeeman, executive vice president of United, said that the three European sirlines in the ven-ture would be likely candidates to make an investment in Apollo.

Mr. Zeeman said that the Euroean system would have no "bias" toward any one airline. In Europe, most national carriers have systems that favor their own flights when travel agents seek information.

The venture by United and the three European carriers is expected to put pressure on a rival group in Europe called Amadeus, which has been seeking to develop its own joint computer system. The group — made up of Air France, Lufthansa, Iberia and Scandinavian Airlines System — said last month that an agreement had been reached to develop such a system by 1989. (NYT, Reuters)

French Chefs as Business Managers

U.S. Professor Finds Them Dictatorial but Effective

By Kurt A. Ruderman

PARIS - To the gourmet diner, a three-star chef is an artist of the exquisite, a magician of the sublime and sensual moment.

To Michael Brimm, a chef is not even a cook. He is a manager, and some manage better than others.

Top chefs do not chop shallets and whisk sauces, he says, they "create and implement through other people, and this is the no-tion of management. Unlike oth-er artists, like painters or sculptors, a chef has only one shot at perfection. Once that is served on the table, if it is not good, it is over. The rest is clearly a management job."

Mr. Brimm, an American, is an expert on new organizational an expert on new organizational designs for improving productiv-ity and workplace quality in large enterprises. He teaches the subject at the elite INSEAD, the ropean Institute of Business Administration at Fontaine-blean, France, where he has been since 1978. He is now an associate professor of organizational

He also knows something about food. He worked as a short-order cook, slinging 30 eggs at time, while completing a bachelor of science degree at Cornell University in the 1960s. Since then his talents have grown more refined - he has apprenticed, among other places, under Jacques Gautier, the chef at Auberge Moustier, a one-star restanrant near Fontainebleau. Japan's Surplus In Trade Shrank Again in June

TOKYO — Japan's merchandise trade surplus shrank from its level of a year ago for the second straight month in June, apparently confirming a trend, the government said Friday. The seasonally adjusted June surplus was $5.51 billion, 17 percent narrower than $6.44 billion the previous month. Unadjusted, the June surplus was $6.61 billion, compared with $7.36 billion.

For the first half of the year, Japan's trade surplus shrank to $40.13 billion, from $48.51 billion in the preceding six-month period, the Finance Ministry said.

Japanese exports slowed and imports accelerated for the first time in five halves. But the surplus remained far wider than the $34.24 billion surplus of a year earlier. Ministry officials said the June lion. They said this reflected a 40.6 percent annual increase in imports of higher-priced crude oil.

"Japan's trade surplus is surely on a downward phase," said Take-

Other government and private economists concurred, saying the June shrinkage showed that international efforts to lower the value of the dollar were finally taking

"There will be some small ups and downs in Japan's trade surplus but the trend has been established for a gradual decline," an economist at a major research firm said.

June exports to the United States, Japan's major trading partner, showed their first year-on-year drop in 27 months, which ministry officials attributed mainly to a 17.8 percent drop in car exports.

Japan's surplus with the United States contracted 10.9 percent in June, to $4.01 billion from $4.43 drop was largely due to a 20.3 percent rise from a year ago in total imports, which totaled $12.19 billion, from $1.52 billion in May and $1.34 billion a year earlier. The ministry reported a 26.3 percent jump in exports to the EC for June from a year earlier.

WASHINGTON - U.S. whole percent for all of this year. sale prices rose by 0.2 percent in June, the smallest increase in five

The Producer Price Index reflects the cost of goods as they leave farms and mines and are processed for the wholesale market. It is considered an important sign of how inflation will affect consumers in a few months.

The government said the June rise in the price index, the lowest since an 0.1 percent increase in February, was mainly due to the moderation in food costs. The consumer foods index increased 0.5 percent, after a 1.4 percent rise in ul City 1987 9.6 0.23 1987 45.6 1.05 de 385 n Polish Exports to West Surged by 18% in Half, Raising Hope for Credit WARSAW — Polish exports to the West surged by 18 percent in the first six months of this year, producing a merchandise trade surplus for the period of $780 million, an official newspaper reported Friday.

The government daily Rzeczpospolita said the figures gave cause for optimism that Poland would qualify for an International Monetary Fund standby credit within a year.

The results, a sharp improvement on the $430 million surplus in last year's first half, indicate Poland is on target for the $1 billion surplus envisaged in this year's economic plan.

This would allow Poland to revise targets for achieving a balanced current account, satisfying IMF conditions and opening the way for a standby credit, the newspaper quoted a trade official as saying.

The plan is expected to be drafted by the end Ow Jones & Co. IMF Makes Loan To Argentina

AmTr-mrk s Conoil Gas Hein Wern MCO Res ProttLamb UnoRestr n

WASHINGTON - The International Monetary Fund said Friday that it had approved a loan totaling $654 million for Argentina, a first step in a package worth nearly $4 billion. The loan is expected to be followed by a $1.4 billion IMF stand-by loan by the end of this month and a $1.95 billion commercial bank package planned for August.

The IMF said the $654 million loan was made because of "lower loan was made because of "lower earnings for agricultural exports caused by the decline in international prices." Argentina, whose foreign debt is about $50 billion, has been badly hurt by falling prices for wheat and beef, which provide the overwhelming share of provide the overwhelming share of its foreign exchange.

SEC Is Said to Widen Probe Into Municipal Bond Sales

WASHINGTON - The Securities and Exchange Commission has widened its investigation of the possibly fraudulent sale of municipal bonds to include about 60 issues, many of them marketed by major Wall Street underwriters, according to published reports. As much as $12 billion of securities may be involved.

The SEC, as is its policy, would not confirm or deny that an investigation is under way.

Previously, the focus of the inquiries was thought to have been Matthews & Wright Group Inc., a New York firm.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, citing government and industry sources, reported Thursday that the SEC has in recent weeks issued subpoems to Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Inc. and Kidder, Peabody & Co. as well as Matthews & Wright. The commission apparently seeks to determine whether the issuers of bonds underwritten by these houses made accurate disclosure about the deals.

Interest on these bonds is generally exempt from federal income tax. But in the cases under investigation, there is allegedly no connection, or a very loose one, between the financing and the projects for which the money was supposedly raised. In that case, the Internal Revenue Service could rule that the offerings are taxable, and their market value would decline. A Donaldson spokeswoman, Catherine M. Conroy, said that the firm has "no reason to believe there are any problems with our underwritings." She said the company was asked by the SEC for information, which it supplied, about several offerings it underwrote in late 1985. Kidder, Peabody was not available for comment.

The Wall Street Journal reported Friday that some offerings underwritten by Miller & Schroeder Financial Inc., based in Minneapolis, were also under investigation. But Paul R. Ekholm, senior vice president, said the firm knew nothing about an SEC inquiry.

A number of other partnerships are also trying to raise big sums to finance leveraged buyouts. In May, for instance, Forstmann Little & Co. said it had raised $2.7 billion.

The steep increase in the number of players is a sign that the high returns are exerting an almost hyp-notic lure for institutions, ranging from pension funds to insuran companies and banks.

However, the competition is also taken as a sign on Wall Street that the field may be growing crowded, which could ultimately reduce profits from the buyouts.

UBS Targeting Hill Samuel As Part of Global Strategy

Thompsons' Strength Is Family Cohesion

By Peter H. Frank New York Times Service

DALLAS - In Dallas, a city renowned for wealthy families, the Thompson family, which owns the nation's largest convenience store chain, 7-Eleven, does not fit the mold. The Thompsons are apparently one of the few families that made their fortune with no help from oil and gas, although they did later buy a big stake in Citgo.

The only children of the Southland Corp.'s founder, Joe C. Thompson Sr., the three Thompson brothers, John P., Jere W. and Joe C. Jr., followed closely the steps walked by their father. The three sons graduated from Highland Park High School and the University of Texas at Austin. There, they all studied business administration, joined the same fraternity, Phi Gamma Delta, and were managers of the football team. After graduating from college, the two older brothers, John, who is 61 years old, and Jere, 55, joined the company immediately. Joe, who is 46, came to the company almost 10 years after he finished school. In January, he bought a local liquor store chain and left the company, reportedly under friendly conditions. John is chairman of the company, Jere is president and chief executive, and John has been described as the bluntest of the brothers and the leader of the family. Jere, the second in command, is more soft-spoken. Joe, known as Jodie, who received an MRA from the Wharton School of Business Administration, has been less intensely involved in Southland. Described by friends and business associates as brothers, their mother and their families also head one of the largest private companies in Dallas. Through Thompson Co., the family has interests in a number of private businesses, whose revenues total $500 million. And according to some of those close to the brothers, the Thompsons have managed to run their holdings without the family arguments that have plagned other wealthy clans.

"They have an incredible ability to get along with each other," said John R. Sloan, the president and chief avantum of Thompson Co. "They all and chief executive of Thompson Co. "They all participate equally in the family businesses." "The quality they seem to all possess is their ability to listen to each other and other people," said Leo E. Linbeck Jr., a Southland director and the chairman and chief executive of Linbeck Construction Corp. in Houston. "They are very industrious, with a good sense of humor." Assuring that the business stays in the family, even at the cost of taking it private for $5.1 billion, came as little surprise to some of those who know the Thompson brothers. A sense of tradition and family history has played an important role throughout the years in guiding the three brothers and their company, these acquaintances said.

After their father died in 1961, John became chairman and expanded the 7-Eleven chain from 600 stores to more than 8,200 in the United States today, making it by far the largest chain of convemence stores in the country.

In 1978, the company expanded into another convenience store area with the purchase of the Chief Auto Parts chain of automotive supplies.

ORPHANS: Real and Imaginary By Eileen Simpson. 249 pages. $16.95.

York, N.Y. 10016.

E ILEEN SIMPSON lost her mother when she was 11 months old and too young to remember anything about it. And yet is the loss of a mother something that even a child as young as that can ever quite forget?

Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 9 East 40th Street, New

Here at any rate are the thoughts, quoted by Simpson in "Orphans," of someone whose mother died when he was 2: "Yes, yes my Maman, whom I was never able to call that because I did not know how to talk when she died. She is my highest image of love - not cold, divine love, but warm, earthly love, maternal. . . . Maman, hold me, baby me! That was Tolstoy, writing at the age of 80.

Two years after her mother's death, Simpson and her sister, Marie, who was 10 months older, were sent to board in a convent at Dobbs Ferry, New York, that was in many ways indistinguishable from an orphanage; they left only to see their father in New York during vacations. Then, when Eileen was he died in his turn.

Now she and Marie were truly orphans. But once she grew up, she came to think of herself, when she thought about being an orphan at all, as one of the "lucky" ones who had emerged unscathed.

It was only in middle life, after she learned that her husband was suffering from cancer, that she had intimations (without initially recognizing them for what they were) that she was going to be forced to re-examine her past; and only after his death that she felt, for the first time, "profoundly orphaned." Her bereavement stirred up the memory of childhood losses, and the long emotional crisis that followed finally forced her to admit just how devastating those losses had been.

The first half of "Orphans" is the product of this self-confrontation. Simpson had begun collecting notes for a book on orphans while her husband was still alive; later she resumed work on it as a form of therapy. But it simply exacerbated her problems until she reached the point at which she recognized that she was part of the story.

Much of what she recalls of her childhood was, outwardly at least, fairly unremarkable. She stayed and in the singular skill with which Simpson recaptures the intensity of childhood, its piercing dramas and frustrations. The secret pleasure, for a convent child, of chewing the celluloid cover of a missal; the sudden terror of losing one's way in a freak snowstorm; the glamour that invested stray memories of her father, and other people's recollections of her mother - one episode after another is brought to life with a sharp immediacy.

by orphans in autobiography and literature. By no means all the figures she examines were literally motherless and fatherless; they include "psychic orphans" such as Charlie Chaplin, and writers ens and Mark Twain.

comments are invariably intelligent and to the point. She is excellent on what Rousseau doesn't tell you in his "Confessions," for example; on Anna Frend's work with children who survived the Nazi death camps, on Samuel Beckett's grim projection play "Not I."

"Orphans" is both a moving book and a wise one; it is a story of sadness — the kind of sadness that can kill — and of sadness overcome. And by the time you finish reading it, you understand why the picture on the cover gives as much prominence to Marie as to Eileen. In the end, the two sisters had to go their own ways; the aunt who pried them gently apart when Eileen was 12 knew what she was doing. But by then they had crossed the essential divide and saved each other from the worst wounds that being orphaned can inflict.

at the Dobbs Ferry convent until her uncles and aunts became concerned that she might be a candidate for inberculosis, and she was sent to a "Preven-torium" in New Jersey; then she and Marie passed some rather drab years with a spinster aunt, lightened by visits to altogether more cheerful relatives and a liberating summer in New Hampshire. The power of the story lies in the telling, however,

Simpson has a wide range of interests (she is a psychotherapist who has also written a notable memoir of John Berryman and his friends, "Poets in Their Youth"), and in the second half of "Orphans" she turns to general themes - to a brief "history of orphanhood" and a consideration of the role played drawn to fantasies of being orphaned, such as Dick-

Much of her material is fascinating, and her

Hoisting a Dollar Sign, Japan Sails Into Peaceful War Among Nations'

By Stewart McBride Special to the Heroid Tribune

PORTO CERVO, Sardinia — Wrapped in blue kimono and flanked by an army of sushi chefs set to carve the raw. taces. fish, Masakazn Kobayashi, the billionaire from Nagoya, Japan, brandished a wooden mallet and helped to smash open a 36-gallon (136-liter) barrel of ceremonial sake

"Kampail" Kobayashi said, making a toast with the rice oine as he threw an arm around Dennis Conner, the hefty San Diego carpet dealer who became the world's most famous yacht skipper last February when his Stars & Stripes sailed back from Australia with the America's Cup, yachting's oldest and most coveted trophy.

The 48-year-old Kobayashi, aboard his futuristic, $30million yacht, had just cruised into Costa Smeralda to survey the performance of Bengal, the modified, rechris-tened yacht Australia III that he had bought from Perth millionaire Alan Bond

He also was using the occasion of the 12-meter world championship to announce Japan's "high tech on the high seas" challenge for the 1991 America's Cup competition, which will be hosted in 1991 by Counce's San Diego Yacht

Before a huge Japanese flag, over which were imposed two dueling yachts crossed like sammai swords, Kobaya-shi proclaimed, through his interpreter, that we will win with our fighting judo spirit." Kobayashi ate another yakitoti brochette as he waited for the translation, then added: "The little guy will always beat the big guy if he uses his brains."

Bengal, indeed, had trounced boating's "hig guys" in the competition off Sardinia, dealing embarrassing de-feats to Stars & Stripes and the Kookaburra II from New Zealand, both finalists in last February's America's Cup

In Japan, land of the rising yen, the age of checkbook yacht racing appears to have dawned, too. Backed by the the Seibn department stores, the country's largest chain, Kobayashi has budgeted $50 million for winning the America's Cup for Japan. But, said Sam Amao, the Japanese syndicate director, "We will spend $500 million if Amao was standing aboard BBC Challenge, the second of the two identical luxury cruising yachts he built for Kobayashi. Each is equipped with discotheque, helipad, glass-bottomed jacuzzi and four-story elevator.

Amao is an affable, 45-year-old sailor and boat builder from Tokyo. A merchant marine by training, he circumnavigated the globe in an engineless, 21-foot (6.4-meter) sloop in 1969. He now is vice president of Sterling Yacht and Shipbuilders, the Japanese company that built not only Kobayashi's two $30-million cruising yachts but only Kobayashi's two $30-million cruising yachts but Bond's sumptuous Southern Cross III, which was used as the America's Cup committee boat in Australia.

Bengal Wins Title, Maybe

PORTO CERVO, Sardinia - Bengal, the Japanese yacht given new life when its protest was upheld Thursday, led New Zealand from start to finish Friday in the third race and provisionally won the world 12meter yachting championship by 40 seconds.

Another protest flag — this one hoisted by New Zealand after rounding the final marker — meant that the winner of the three-week event would be determined in the jury room, possibly Saturday morning.

Bengal had a three-second edge as the yachts crossed the starting line and a lead of 1-57 at the halfway wing mark over the 23.5-nautical-mile course, raced in light winds of 5 to 10 knots that favored Bengal.

Bengal won a reprieve in the best-of-three competition Thursday when the jury ruled that New Zealand had obstructed Bengal with a tack at the start of the race.

ST. LOUIS - The St. Louis Cardinals scored four runs in the bottom of the 10th inning Thursday night as they beat the San Francis. co Giants, 7-6, and continued to pull away from the rest of the teams in the National League East. The Cardinals extended their winning streak to eight — their longest since 12 straight in 1982 and now lead the second-place Chicago Cubs by 9½ games.

But Thursday night's game "was crazy," said the Cardinals' Willie McGee. "Sometimes it seems like we have to be challenged and put in a bad spot before we come back." The rally began with three walks that loaded the bases before McGee hit a two-run double, followed by run-scoring singles from Tony Pena and Jose Oquendo. "We gave it to them, that's what happened," said the Giants' man-ager, Roger Craig. "If you have a three-run lead, the only thing you've got to do is throw strikes. If they hit it out of the park, O.K. But don't walk guys."

The Cardinals had tied the score at 3 on John Morris's two-run homer in the seventh. Then the Giants scored three times in the top of the 10th on an RBI grounder by Chris Speier and a two-run single by Jeffrey Leonard.

But relief pitcher Joe Price walked Ozzie Smith. Scott Garrelts relieved and walked Terry Pendleton and Jack Clark, loading the bases. Seleski had driven her 14-yearold daughter from Huntington Sta-tion, New York, to Uniondale that evening, deposited her at the Coliscum gate, and then repaired to the Quiet Room, set up in April to give parents a place to go during concerts. Before, parents often stayed in their cars or sat through performances of groups they had never heard of with children who pretended to be orphans.

The parents said they had become increasingly concerned about rowdiness and violence at rock concerts, especially in light of all the stories about drug use, girls throwing their underwear onto the stage and concert-goers being trampled to death in stadiums.

Parents are more aware of what their kids are doing," said Hilary Hartung, the director of public relations at the Coliseum, one of a handful of stadiums around the country with Quiet Rooms.

"I can't tell you how many times I've told my daughter, "No, you can't go to the concert," said Terry Lange of Hauppange, New York, "But when I heard about the Quiet Room, I decided to let ber."

Breaking Ground for New Globe By Michael Billington

ONDON - Odessa, Texas, L has one. So do San Diego and Cedar City, Utah, London has, however, managed to survive for more than 300 years without

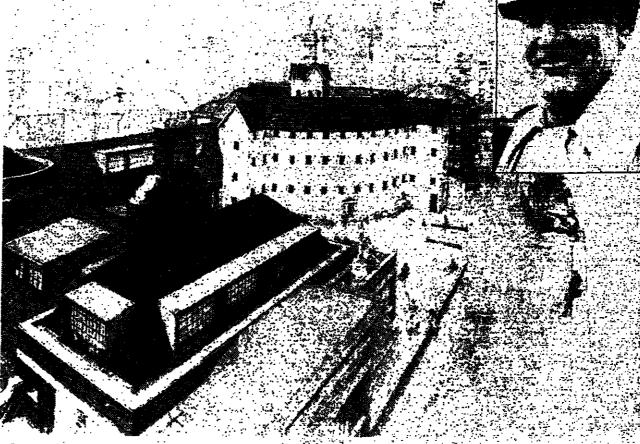

The items in question are reconstructions of Shakespeare's original Globe Theatre. There were two Globes: the first, built in 1598, was destroyed by fire in 1613, the second, built in 1614, was pulled down by the Puritans in 1644. But on July 16 the Duke of Edinburgh, at a ground-breaking ceremony on the south bank of the Thames, will present an oak timber post from Windsor Great Park to the International Shakespeare Globe Center.

It will join 23 other timber posts staking out the perimeter of a new Globe Theatre. It will also mark a vital point in a 17-year campaign waged by Sam Wanamaker, an American actor and director, against considerable odds, to remind London of its Shakespearean heritage.

Wanamaker's dream dates back to his boyhood. At the 1933 Chicago World's Fair, he saw a replica of the Globe and said he was struck by "the avoidance of the sort of hushed quality you had to have when you went to the theater." Later he acted in a Globe theater in the Great Lakes Festival at Cleveland.

When he arrived in London in 1949 he made a beeline for the Bankside in Southwark - directly opposite St. Paul's Cathedral, on the south side of the Thames - to find the British equivalent All he discovered was a power station, desolate wharves, rickety tenements and an obscure bronze plaque set into the wall of a brewery commemorating the existence of Shakespeare's theater. In his disappointment lay the birth of a

In 1970 Wanamaker becam executive director of the Globe Playhouse Trust, whose goal was rebuilding Shakespeare's theater and providing facilities for scholars. In 1972 he opened the Bear Gardens Museum on the site of a former bear-baiting pit. He also supervised a Shakespeare festival on Bankside, which came to a premature end in 1973 when a was playing Cleopatra blew down in a storm.

But the biggest blow to Wanamaker's dream came in 1982 when the newly elected Southwark Council decided that the provision of employment and council housing took precedence over Shakespeare, and reneged on an agreement to provide planning permission.

The result was a bitter legal battle, which ended in the High Court in June 1986 in a vindication of Wanamaker. As a result the council has given the Globe Trust a 125-year lease on the oneacre site for a nominal rent.

When it comes to financing the project, Wanamaker is unshakeably optimistic. He estimates the tent in which Vanessa Redgrave capital cost of the project as £16 million (about $25.8 million). He grims actually see? The plans are P.M., others in late afternoon has raised £1 million in pledges, highly ambitious. Theo Crosby, Wanamaker's reconstructed
